Our mother is both our first teacher and her lap, our first school. We learn our first words as we look into our mother's eyes and lips.

Over time, we start to crawl and our home becomes our school. Our father, brother and sister become our playmates. Furniture in the house becomes our toys.

At the end of our lives, we realize that all people and living things are our teachers, and we realize that the universe we live in is our home. This is what we need to understand from the concept of 'homeschooling'.

Even the schools where we are officially registered and where we spend most of our day are part of this concept (if you feel at home in the school you attend).
